

The 5th Annual Food Recovery Forum at WasteExpo
A Practicum on Solutions to Food Waste Prevention, Reduction, & Recovery
August 10-13, 2020 | New Orleans, LA

This year's Food Recovery Forum focuses on the progress made and current innovations to reduce food loss and waste in the U.S., to rescue wholesome food to feed the hungry, and to recover inedible food residuals for beneficial reuse. At the Food Recovery Forum, influential thinkers and decision makers from across sectors will gather to discuss strategies and actions being taken to achieve the national goal of reducing food waste by half by 2030. You'll walk away with the latest insights, solutions, and valuable connections. Presentations at the award-winning Food Recovery Forum focus on successful initiatives and model programs to educate attendees and to help expand the significant efforts being undertaken to reduce food waste and increase food recovery for beneficial reuse. Much of the content is directed toward generators of food waste, e.g., restaurants, groceries, institutions, food retailers and wholesalers as well as the public sector and government officials who are responsible for developing and implementing policy for residential and commercial food waste diversion and recovery programs.

Timely and Informative Educational Sessions at the Food Recovery Forum

Attendees will learn about advancements in reducing food waste and increasing food recovery. If you're a generator of food waste from industries including hospitality, manufacturing, healthcare, food service or any other institution that generates food waste, you'll discover a wide array of solutions that benefit both the environment and your bottom line. If you're an organics recycling professional, you'll learn best practices from experts and have opportunities to network with the best in the industry. Whether you're a producer, hauler, or processor of food waste, the time is right to dig deeper into this industry by learning about its vast opportunities and networking with peers and experts in the field.

Speakers at the Food Recovery Forum include leaders of public, nonprofit, academic, and private organizations who are at the forefront of this sector and who have made significant contributions to developing solutions to food waste prevention, loss, reduction, and recovery.
